

I have a real problem when businesses think it is perfectly alright to invade a individual's privacy all in the name of the "all mighty dollar". Before the "Do Not Call Registry" I received telemarketing calls almost every hour from 8 am to 10 pm. If you answered the call and told the caller you were not interested in their services or products, it just prompted additional calls. Many of the telemarketers were rude and pushy and would not take no as an answer. They would also tie up your phone line for several minutes after each call, so you could neither make a call or receive a call. I am extremely happy to receive these calls even from companies that I do business with. If I need something from them "I" will make the call. These calls are unwanted and unnecessary since 98% of the services and products they are pushing are not needed and not wanted.
